Tyler Anthony is an associate attorney at Belden Blaine Raytis, LLP, specializing in labor and employment litigation, with a focus on high-stakes single-plaintiff and class action wage and hour matters. He manages all aspects of litigation, including appeals, in state and federal courts and private arbitration. Tyler's expertise includes complex legal issues such as the enforceability of arbitration agreements and matters related to collective bargaining agreements, making him a key advocate for clients in industries like construction, transportation, healthcare, and agriculture.

Before joining BBR, Tyler developed his litigation skills at Perkins Coie and DLA Piper in Los Angeles, where he represented national and international companies in various legal matters. His experience spans labor and employment disputes, commercial and business disputes, entertainment litigation, and intellectual property issues, showcasing his broad legal proficiency.

Tyler graduated magna cum laude from Loyola Law School in 2015, earning the Fritz B. Burns merit scholarship and serving as an editor of the Loyola Law Review. He also externed for U.S. District Court Judge Dolly Gee and received the Dean Service Award for his pro bono work. Tyler's blend of litigation expertise and strategic insight makes him a highly effective advocate in complex legal environments.
